

AIM AND PURPOSE

PRE (Philosophy, Religion, and Ethics) helps students to understand the role and significance of religion in society. It gives them the tools to consider both how beliefs are derived from scripture, communities, and formal philosophy, and how concrete practices and actions are motivated by these beliefs. It gives them an understanding of the diversity of religious communities in the UK, and it equips them with skills of clear communication, evaluation and comparison. As a result of a thorough education in PRE, students should be able to empathise with people who are different to them and could have a better understanding of their own identity and develop their own answers to the questions posed by philosophy, religion, and ethics.

HOW DOES THE CURRICULUM INDUCT STUDENTS INTO THE DISCIPLINE OF THE SUBJECT?

The PRE curriculum uses the stories that are significant to religious communities to introduce students to the beliefs that those communities hold about God and themselves. In KS3, units about Biblical stories are complemented by units which explicitly and thoroughly trace a line from scripture to belief and contemporary practice within specific communities (Judaism, Christianity, Islam, and Buddhism). Year 8 concludes with units which are philosophical, social, and ethical in nature; these units expose students to the broader disciplines within the scope of PRE and give them greater insight into the roles that religion can have in society.

At GCSE, building on knowledge learned in KS3, students study areas of beliefs and practices in a systematic way, developing their skills in the concise communication of detailed information, evaluation, and comparison. They also compare the approaches of different religions to moral and social topics and develop skills in observing and communicating similarities and contrasts between and within religious communities, while considering the broad social context of religion and non-religion in UK society.

Throughout the curriculum, students' skills of evaluation, comparison, and clear communication are developed. The different stages of the curriculum introduce them both explicitly and implicitly to some of the many disciplines that the study of religion can include and would include were they to continue to pursue the subject to KS5 or beyond, including literature, philosophy, history, and the social sciences.

OVERVIEW

In Philosophy, religion and ethics, our aim is to induct students into these three disciplines by exposing them to different worldviews and perspectives. Our core purpose is to generate empathy and understanding for the beliefs of others, whilst at the same time encouraging students to question their own moral views. In Year 7, students will build a strong foundation in PRE by learning about key religious figures and religious stories that will help them to assess the nature of God as well as what is morally right and wrong.
